Thousands of Parisians watched in horror from behind police cordons last night as a ferocious blaze devastated the landmark Notre-Dame Cathedral, destroying its spire and spreading to

Police said they believed the inferno began accidentally and may be linked to building work at the cathedral. The 850-year-old gothic masterpiece had been undergoing restoration work. Smoke billowed across the city and ash fell over a large area. No deaths or injuries were initially reported. Buildings around the cathedral were evacuated, and the fire department

UK troops use paint on tanks that leads to cancer

Defence chiefs admit toxic chromium-VI is applied to rust-proof MoD vehicles

THE British military uses rust-preventing paint on its tanks that contains chromium VI, which is known to be carcinogenic, it has been revealed.

The Herald can reveal, speaking to new contracts for the health of personnel and women.

Defence chiefs have confirmed that highly toxic chromium VI – the substance at the heart of the first Bhopal gas tragedy in the US – is still being used by UK armed forces. This includes tanks, jeeps and armoured personnel carriers.

Their admission comes after the French government was last year forced to apologise to hundreds of military personnel who had been exposed to the chemical. It is now being used on equipment.

Regularly, US soldiers who become ill after handling paint containing chromium VI, which is also called hexavalent chromium, have been granted medical certificates through the Centre for Disease Control and Prevention.

Defence Procurement Minister Stuart Andrew said the MoD was currently researching alternatives to rust-proofing paint that contains chromium VI.

He said it was "not possible to say that the MoD is still using a rust-preventing chemical in certain types of military vehicles – especially tanks – because of the health of personnel and women."

He added that the MoD was "working to reduce the use of chromium VI on military vehicles."

Las llamas devastan Notre Dame, símbolo de la cultura europea

El incendio, que se originó por unas obras de restauración, derrumba el techo de la nave central y la aguja de la icónica catedral gótica de París

M. SAGSETS / S. KRISO. París. La apacible tarde primavera de París se vio agrietada por un terremoto que terminó a las 18.50 por un incendio devastador que devoró buena parte de la catedral de Notre-Dame, una de las monarquías más visitadas del mundo y un símbolo cernido de la cultura de Europa. Las autoridades sospechan que el fuego tuvo su origen en unas obras de restauración. Afortunadamente, no hay víctimas, pero gran parte del edificio, construido entre los siglos XII y XIV y considerado una joya del arte gótico, quedó a salvo. Se colapsó una aguja que coronaba el cielo de la ciudad y se derrumbó, al igual que el techo de la nave central.

"Como todos nuestros compañeros, estoy triste por ver arder esta parte de nuestra", dijo el presidente francés, Emmanuel Macron. Los principales líderes mundiales expresaron su pesar por el desastre. Palmas 10 x 10
